WIMAN ON THE RACK,

before Justice Ingraham in the Court of Oyer and Terminer this morning when Assistant District-Attorney Francis L. Wellman, the most formidable and most relentless of the county's prosecutors told the jury the story of the allege crime of Erastus Wiman.

Mr. Wellman described forgery in th second degree, for which a convicted person may be consigned to prison for Erastus Wimen, a man of three scor rears, who has attained a reputation that extends all over America, is charged with the simple crime of drawing a check on his firm, R. G. Dun & Co., for $5,000, in favor of E. W. Bullinger & Co., as he was empowered to do; of forging the signature of E. W.

Justice Ingraham permitted Mr. Wellman to go on, and holding up the check he said:

"The magnanimous admission of Gen. Tracy that Mr. Wiman signed E. W. Builinger's indorsement is because they can't deny it, for Mr. Wiman confessed his criminal act and begged for mercy in a letter written a year ago to his employers. And this is not Wiman's hand. It is disguised. Why did he disguise it?"

Mr. Wellman said that after the discovery of the forgery R. G. Dun found that there was a shortage in Wiman's accounts of $187,000, while the books did not show any shortage. Wiman having covered it up by skilful manipulation of checks.

"A bookkeeper discovered a shortage of $155,000 in 1831, spoke to Mr. Wiman about it and Wiman gave him a check on his own bank for $135,000. Next day Wiman said: 'Don't deposit that check yet,' and kept him along from day to day, the bookkeeper holding the check fourteen menths.

"A month before that forgery Wiman presented a check, drawn to E. W. Builinger and indorsed it. Leilin him it had been drawn by mistake. Next month he presented this check. Then he scratched out the indorsement and got Builinger to indorse it. Leilin him it had been drawn by mistake. Next month he presented this check. Aving written on it in a disguised hand "E. W. The articles of agreement between R. G. Dun, Wimsm and Arthur J. King and Robert D. Douglass of Jan. I. 1889, were put in evidence. They stated that R. G. Dun was and should continue to be the sole owner, and would pay a sum to Wiman equal to 17 per cent. of the profits.

to Wiman equal to 17 per cent, of the profits.

The agreement speaks of this percentage as "salary," and says what the profits shall be used only as a basis for determining the amount of salary, but it also says that should either Wiman. King or Douglas die, the agreement shall continue in force, the heirs taking the place of the deceased.

As Mr. Dunn's prophetic reputation rested on sustained heat, this expression of opinion brought him out viscorously.

"It is not and cannot be much cooler," he said. "At 8 o'clock yesterday morning the tamperature was 75 degrees, and the same hour this morning it is 72. There is a difference of but 3 degrees, and that is offset by a reduced velocity of wind, which is only five miles an hour this morning, while it was between eight and nine miles an hour yesterday.
